C3 AI and RTX's Collins Aerospace Expand Collaboration to Drive AI Transformation in Defense and Intelligence

December 11, 2024

Joint efforts will deliver AI-powered solutions to enhance operational efficiency and decision making for national security

REDWOOD CITY, Calif.--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Dec. 11, 2024-- C3 AI (NYSE: AI), the Enterprise AI application software company, and Collins Aerospace, an RTX business, today announced expanded joint initiatives to develop and deliver AI solutions across the defense and intelligence space.

“As the defense and intelligence sectors confront increasingly complex challenges, the need for advanced, scalable AI solutions has never been more critical,” said Thomas M. Siebel, CEO, C3 AI. “Our strengthened partnership with Collins underscores our shared commitment to equipping federal agencies with the AI capabilities essential to maintaining strategic advantage, improving decision making, and enhancing mission readiness. Together, we are accelerating a transformative shift that will redefine how national security and defense are achieved in the modern era.”

These new initiatives aim to leverage AI for critical defense operations, advancing technology adoption in support of federal priorities. Specifically, C3 AI and Collins are deploying applications from the C3 AI Defense and Intelligence Suite, including C3 AI Readiness and C3 Generative AI for Defense and Intelligence.

“By combining our expertise in mission-critical systems with C3 AI’s advanced AI platform and applications, we are equipping federal agencies with the tools they need to act decisively, enhance situational awareness, and strengthen national security. This collaboration is about more than technology — it’s about driving a future-ready approach to defense,” said Ryan Bunge, vice president and general manager, C4I&A, Collins Aerospace.
